January is Alzheimer's Awareness Month

We all strive to live each day to the fullest, but receiving a diagnosis of dementia can feel like it brings everything to a standstill, and many people still believe that it means the end of a meaningful life. But, while living with dementia can be difficult, we've learned from our community that it can also be the catalyst to celebrate our present like never before.

Join us this January, as we recognize Alzheimer Awareness Month. Throughout the month we'll be sharing tips and tools to support living well with the disease. We'll also be sharing stories of those people living with dementia and caregivers across British Columbia who have discovered moments of joy during this often hard and challenging journey.

With an estimated more than 85,000 people living with dementia in B.C. it is important the people of B.C. are educated and have tools when they need them. Let's start the year by shifting our perspectives and learning how people affected by the disease can celebrate life like never before!

Visit alzbc.org/FullOfLife to stay connected throughout Awareness Month.

Webinar spotlight: The lived experience series

In our lived experience webinars, you will hear from people living with dementia and caregivers as they share their firsthand knowledge and unique experiences facing the disease. These webinars are a doorway to a better understanding dementia and an opportunity to challenge the stigma.

Recorded webinars from our YouTube playlist are available to watch at alzbc.org/lived-experience.

Also, our webinars are held every Wednesday with topics from understanding dementia to practical caregiving strategies to the latest research study. Visit alzbc.org/webinars and register for any upcoming sessions!
