Finding meaningful connection through support groups

The Alzheimer Society of B.C.'s caregiver support groups are based on the information and mutual aid model, following the philosophy that people in similar situations are in a unique position to give and receive support from others along the dementia journey.

Caring for a family member or friend living with dementia can be isolating for many, as those in your social network may not be able to fully understand or relate to the caregiver experience. A support group provides that connection to others who truly "get it" so no one has to walk this journey alone.

In a support group, we see people connect at a deep level and share things that they might not have been able to say outside of the group. Sometimes tears are shared but often there is laughter and moments of joy shared too. A support group can provide that sense of belonging and genuine understanding many caregivers are missing in their day to day lives and the friendships formed here frequently transcend the group and become a vital lifeline.

To register for a support group, visit pages 6 and 7. For more information, visit our webpage at alzbc.org/support-group.

Support group facilitators needed!

Join our volunteer team! We're seeking passionate, caring, and community-oriented people to facilitate our in-person and virtual support groups. Provide caregivers a chance to learn about and connect with others on the dementia journey. Facilitation training will be provided.

You must be available for a minimum one-year commitment. The role is best suited for those who are not actively caregiving. If you are currently a primary caregiver and you know a family member or friend who would make a great support group facilitator, we encourage you to share this volunteer position with them. To learn more, email kmckercher@alzheimercbc.org or complete an online application, at alzbc.org/volunteer.

In-person and virtual programs available

While we continue to offer our programs virtually, we are also continuing to expand our in-person sessions.
