Alzheimer's Awareness Month

We all strive to make the most of each day, cherishing our connections to the community and leading meaningful lives. However, receiving a dementia diagnosis can feel like an abrupt barrier; one in two British Columbians believe that a dementia diagnosis means the end of a meaningful life. But our community has illuminated a different truth: while living with dementia poses challenges, it can also reveal moments of joy and introduce us to a community of incredible resilience to help us along the way.

This January, we invite you to join us for Alzheimer's Awareness Month. Throughout the month, we will focus on sharing inspiring stories of British Columbians who have discovered renewed connections to their community or found a profound sense of belonging through our programs. We want to shed light on how our initiatives have not only assisted people affected by dementia but have also empowered them to live meaningful lives.

With over 85,000 people living with dementia in British Columbia, it is imperative that British Columbians stay well informed and equipped with the tools to navigate the dementia journey. Let's kick the new year off with a collective shift in perspective, discovering how people affected by dementia can celebrate life in ways previously unimagined.

To stay connected throughout Awareness Month, visit alzbc.org/FullofLife.

Webinar spotlight: Lived experience series

In our lived experience webinar series, people living with dementia and caregivers will share firsthand knowledge of their unique experiences on the dementia journey and the community they've gained by taking part in Society programs. These webinars are a doorway to a better understanding of dementia and an opportunity to challenge the stigma associated with dementia.

On Wednesday, January 10, Jim Mann, an advocate living with dementia, will moderate a panel discussion on living life to the fullest on the dementia journey. On Wednesday, January 24, Jana Schulz, a caregiver and registered social worker, will lead a panel discussion on the importance of finding a supportive community within our programs and services. These webinars promise unique insights and valuable perspectives. Don't miss these inspiring conversations that will empower and enlighten you, as we come together to build a more compassionate and inclusive future. Learn more on page 6.

Recorded webinars from our YouTube playlist are available to watch at alzbc.org/lived-experience.
