

About the Alzheimer Society

The Alzheimer Society is Canada's leading nationwide health charity for people living with Alzheimer's disease and other dementias. Through the Alzheimer Society Research Program, we fund research for risk reduction, treatments, and a cure. Active in nearly 100 communities across the country, local Alzheimer Societies provide programs and services to help people living with dementia and care partners.

In pursuit of a cure

The Alzheimer Society Research Program has been active since 1989, contributing millions of dollars annually to advance research and support researchers in Canada.

The Alzheimer Society is a leading source of support, information and education

For people living with dementia and care partners, we provide support, information and access to programs and services which connect people living with dementia and care partners to health services and information in their own communities.

For health-care providers, we provide information and resources to encourage early diagnosis and support individuals and care partners throughout the progression of dementia.

The Alzheimer Society advocates for change nationally and internationally

We work with the federal government on dementia public policy to influence health and social programs that directly affect people living with dementia.

We are one of four founding members of Alzheimer's Disease International, and work collectively to make dementia a global health priority, raise awareness and increase investments in research.
