

Alzheimer Society of Ontario seeks to build a safer Niagara Region for people living with dementia

ST. CATHARINES, ON – January 29, 2018 – The Alzheimer Society of Ontario is calling attention to the serious risk of going missing that people living with dementia-related memory problems face – 60 per cent will become lost at some point.

“Half of the people living with dementia who go missing for 24 hours face serious injury or death,” said Lisa Salapatek, Chief Program and Public Policy Officer, Alzheimer Society of Ontario. “It is everyone’s responsibility to keep these people safe. While having dementia presents challenges, there are many things we can do to manage the risk of getting lost or going missing.”

Through Finding Your Way®, the provincial charity is helping people in the Niagara Region who are living with dementia, their families and caregivers recognize the risk of going missing, be prepared for incidents of going missing, and ensure that people with dementia can live safely in the community. The program outlines simple, but vital strategies that can help people stay safe while maintaining their quality of life.

“One terrifying morning I awoke early to discover my husband had left the house,” explains Lucille Bisailon, who lives in St. Catharines and cares for her husband with Alzheimer’s. “Uncharacteristically, I did not lock the exterior gates. I called the police and after organizing a search party they were able to find him sleeping in someone’s back yard – a several hour walk from our home. I learned a lot from this experience and securing our house became a priority for me before bed each night.”

“Having a plan to reduce the risk of wandering is critical for people living with dementia and their caregivers,” says Dipika Damerla, Minister of Seniors Affairs. “By raising awareness and using strategies through Finding Your Way, we can proactively keep people safe in their home and community.”
