On This Date

1536 – Jacques Cartier set sail from the St. Lawrence River for France with the captive Iroquois Chief Donnacona, who would tell the French of the "Kingdom of Saguenay." It was said to be full of gold, rubies, and other treasures.

1877 – Pursued by U.S. troops following his victory at the Battle of Little Big Horn, Sioux Chief Sitting Bull and his band crossed the border into Saskatchewan. Hunger and cold finally forced them to return and surrender.

Daily Trivia

Young Martin Brodeur learned a lot about hockey while following his dad to work. After a successful playing career, Denis Brodeur became the official photographer for the Montreal Canadiens. He attended all the practices and games for more than 20 years.

Quote of the Day

"No one in Montreal learns how to skate. You're just born that way."

Happy Birthday!

Martin Brodeur, born in 1972, is the legendary Canadian ice hockey player who, in 2009, became the winningest goalie in NHL history. The 10-time All Star played for the New Jersey Devils for 22 seasons, earning three Stanley Cup championships before retiring after the 2015 season. Following in his hockey-playing father Denis Brodeur's footsteps, he is also an Olympian, winning gold for Team Canada in 2002 and 2010—his dad won the bronze in 1956. Considered one of the greatest goalies of all time, Martin Brodeur was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame in 2018.
